Foreword

THIS year's Cauldron is different in form and design from previous issues. Seniors will see reflected here the four seasons as they occurred. Accompanied by the sports, and activities which belong to each, the story is incomplete for the spirit that helps to produce events worth remembering cannot be captured by the lens or the printed word. We hope that those who read these pages in later years may be carried back in memory to the happy experiences of their high school days as they are recalled and suggested by the pictures and stories in this volume.

Autumn

*A*UTUMN at Saint Mary's is the busiest season of the year. It is a period of transition when last year's juniors become this year's seniors. The freshmen, who will one day lead the school, learn to adjust themselves to the ways and customs of Saint Mary's, but they must first pass the supreme test of initiation. For those who survive, there is the reward of a genial reception given by the seniors, who just a few hours earlier had been inhuman tyrants. In September, responsibilities are felt and lived up to, as new officers assume their positions. Fall means football and the grind and glory of molding experienced and unproven talent into a team ready to face the challenge of the Valley Oak League. While the hint of approaching winter casts a blight on much of nature, the spirit of Saint Mary's resembles the burst of blazing glory that accompanies autumn rather than the waning of the season.

Girls' Athletic Association . . . The Girls' Association has sponsored inter-class sports in basketball, volley ball, baseball and ping pong. Besides intra-mural activities, the girls' teams have traveled to the Bay Area in search of athletic conquests.

Societies

Block S.M. . . . Block S.M. members stop to pose under the familiar oak tree at Saint Mary's. A snow trip during the winter, a dinner-dance during the spring, topped off by an athletic day in June, were a few of the society's accomplishments this year. The highlight of the year's activities came in May with the inauguration of the first annual boxing carnival.

Honor Society . . . Among the achievements merited by many students, membership in the Honor Society still remains the top prize. Those who maintain a "B" average in their final grades become members of this Society.

Facing their first real test in good football competition, the little Rams from Saint Mary's found the going pretty rough in the Valley. For the first time in years, as a convenience to the students and players, Saint Mary's returned to playing their neighboring high schools. Coaches Glenn Miller and John Dinubilo worked hard to build a strong grid machine for the future.

Although ten players will be graduated this June, a host of returning sophomores and juniors will insure a competent squad for the next season. The rough going this year left an imprint on Saint Mary's, but bigger schools have praised the spirit and courage of the fighting Rams.

Winter

*H*IBERNATION is an unknown season at Saint Mary's. The grey, moist fog which envelopes Stockton rarely dampens the spirits of the students whose school resembles the proverbial bee hive where each student is a worker confronted with a particular task to complete. There are no drones in late November when the annual bazaar draws near. The lower hall hums with activity as workers spend hours decorating booths and planning displays. One of the busiest workers is the basketball coach, who has the tremendous task of piecing together a precision machine able to cope with the keen opposition of neighboring teams. The Madonna and Her Child are honored by all in the month of December, when the Christmas Program is given. In early February the eldest bees leave their hives in order to enjoy a day of fun and merrymaking. This occasion is the Senior "Ditch Day," which takes everyone to the snowy slopes of Dodge Ridge, and which, in spite of aching muscles and snowburns, is enjoyed by all who attend. To add to the excitement of the season the Rams enter the traditional Tracy Basketball Tournament, where yelling and cheering are as much a part of the show as basketball. Winter gives way to Spring. It has been a busy winter for all but it has been one which they will long remember and cherish.

Paul interrupts Pop.

"Put down that razor, Paul."

For the first time in several years, the seniors departed from the tradition of presenting Christmas Mimes. This year, two entirely different plays were combined in the Christmas Program. "Pop Reads the Christmas Carol," a comedy about a family's holiday secrets and surprises contrasted with the more serious "When the Chimes Rang," an adaptation of a medieval legend which dealt with a peasant child's true love for the Christ Child.

Spring

*I*N the springtime hearts are light. Spirits soar at the unexpected beauty which transforms bare, gaunt fields into orchards wooded white and pink. While April pours silver into every little creek, the magic of the spring world does not halt school activities. The day begins sooner for those who rise early each morning in Lent to take their places at the holy sacrifice of the Mass. In early March, even the air has a new lightness as a host of would-be Fellers and Ruths compete for coveted positions on the baseball team, to lead the Rams on to victory. Later, loyal fans watch intently for the fielding gem, the error, the flash of genius on the field. Freshmen and sophomores are interested spectators as the Junior-Senior picnic and prom, long-awaited by upperclassmen, become realities. May is Mary's month, and Our Lady, newly-crowned each day, reigns from her flower-laden altar. After months of planning, Cauldron staff members lay aside their pens and finish their book of dreams. Hours spent practicing the graduation ceremonies bring the sudden realization that the promise of spring has passed, and the finality of summer and graduation is imminent.

THE gaiety which characterizes spring gradually mellows and deepens into the warmth of summer. Bright June days herald the approach of holidays and mark the conclusion of another school year. To the seniors, graduation takes on a new and sudden reality. From the time they pose for pictures, to the unforgettable moment when they receive their diplomas, the ceremony of graduation dominates their thoughts. They may be portrayed as citizens of two worlds: the one a fulfillment of four years of promise, the other an entrance into unknown lands. The diploma, the symbol of each one's achievement, is, in effect, a ticket entitling the bearer to a more independent life in the world. Responsibility, which for the most part has rested lightly on young shoulders, now becomes a potent factor in each one's life. For some the triumph of commencement is overshadowed by reluctance to leave the school and companions, which for four years have been shaping influences on their character and personality. Yet each graduate, while viewing his own aspirations with faith and hope, is ever mindful of the high purpose and goal for which he has been taught to strive, the ultimate end of which is not of this world, but of eternity.
